

Douglas Niedt's GUITAR TECHNIQUE TIP OF THE MONTH

Yes, it's "Doug's Dirty Little Secrets"

(Doug subtitled his Tech Tip as "Doug's Dirty Little Secrets" after reading someone's posted message on a guitar web forum. The writer asserted that professional virtuoso guitarists all had secrets they kept to themselves and wouldn't tell anyone else, so no one would play as well as them!)

Practicing In Altered Rhythms

Do you ever reach a point in learning a piece where it just doesn't seem to get any better? You still make mistakes in the same places or have difficulty with the same chord changes or scale passages? Or do you find that even when you play a piece you have been playing for years that the same passages still trip you up?

I learned how to overcome those difficulties from pianist Samuel Sanders, one of the most respected accompanists of the twentieth century. He was Itzhak Perlman's chief accompanist from 1966-1999 and accompanist to Pinchas Zukerman, Paula Robison, Yo-Yo Ma, Joshua Bell, Mstislav Rostropovich, and many others.

His was a simple routine: practice at tempo, then slow, then with altered rhythms, and finally at half speed with a metronome. I think one of the key ingredients is practicing with altered rhythms.

Say you were having trouble with the final scales in the finale of Fernando Sor's Introduction and Variations on a Theme by Mozart op.9. The scale seven measures from the end is written like this:

 Listen to me play the original rhythm. (A separate window will open that you can minimize in order to still see the written musical example as you listen.)

Using Samuel Sanders' routine, we would practice it at tempo, about MM=160 for an eighth note, or as fast as we could play it well. Then we would practice it slowly, maybe about MM=100 for an eighth note.

Then we would practice in altered rhythms. Here is one way in a long-short-short rhythmic pattern:

🔊 Listen to me play it. (A separate window will open that you can minimize in order to still see the written musical example as you listen.)

Here is another version in a short-short-long rhythmic pattern:

🔊 Listen to me play it. (A separate window will open that you can minimize in order to still see the written musical example as you listen.)

Here is yet another possibility in a dotted rhythm:

🔊 Listen to me play it. (A separate window will open that you can minimize in order to still see the written musical example as you listen.)

🔊 Listen to me play it. (A separate window will open that you can minimize in order to still see the written musical example as you listen.)

Or a version in 12/8.

🔊 Listen to me play it. (A separate window will open that you can minimize in order to still see the written musical example as you listen.)

Let's look at Antonio Lauro's Vals Venezolana No. 3. Measures 18-20 are written originally as:

🔊 Listen to me play it. (A separate window will open that you can minimize in order to still see the written musical example as you listen.)

They could be practiced in a dotted rhythm:

🔊 Listen to me play it. (A separate window will open that you can minimize in order to still see the written musical example as you listen.)

Or in a reverse dotted rhythm:

🔊 Listen to me play it. (A separate window will open that you can minimize in order to still see the written musical example as you listen.)

In a "short-short-long" pattern:
